About the service

Scottish Autism - Central Outreach Team is registered by the Care Inspectorate to provide a support service - care at home and housing support service for people with autism. The service is provided by Scottish Autism, a voluntary sector provider of services for people with autism.

The service operates in Clackmannanshire. The intensity of the service can vary from supporting someone for a few hours a day, to 24 hour support in a person's own accommodation. At the time of the inspection the service was supporting up to 23 people.

The staff members from the Outreach service can also support other people in other local Scottish Autism services.

The service summarises their aims as follows: "Our mission is to enable people living with autism in Scotland through the whole life journey."

What people told us

We met people in three places, and spent time with them and their support staff. As it was not appropriate to interview the people we met, we saw how they responded to staff support and spent their time. We saw that people were doing activities they enjoyed and that they responded positively to their staff.

Two relatives returned questionnaires to us. They both agreed that;

- The support plan tells people about the person and what they like.
- Staff know how to support the person.
- The person feels safe in the service.
- Staff treat the person well.
- I am confident staff have the right training and skills to support the person.
- Staff members have enough time to support and care for the person.
- I am asked for my views on how things can be improved.
- I feel my views are listened to by the service.
- When I tell the service I am unhappy with anything, they do something about it.
- The service helps the person to be as independent as possible.
- Overall I am happy with the quality of care and support the service given to the person.

One relative made the following comments;

"The staff encourage my son to do lots of activities. He has become more social and has a much busier life. He has his own tenancy and 24 hour support every day. He is always very keen to go back to his own home after visiting his family."

Self assessment

The service had not been asked to complete a self assessment in advance of the inspection. We looked at their own improvement plan and quality assurance paperwork. These demonstrated their priorities for development and how they were monitoring of the quality of the provision within the service.

From this inspection we graded this service as:

Quality of care and support	6 - Excellent
Quality of staffing	not assessed
Quality of management and leadership	6 - Excellent

What the service does well

This is an excellent service that has sustained its very high quality practice and outcomes for people since the last inspection. Further the service had continued to make changes and improvements to its practice for the people it supports.

The whole service was built round understanding how best to support each person with their autism, and as individual personalities. The people were supported very sensitively by familiar staff. The staff spoke very positively how they supported people to make choices and be as independent as possible. The staff in the service continually reflected on what was working well for people, and what needed to change, to enable people to live a fulfilled life. The staff in the service supported people to have a range of activities meaningful to them in their own home, in the community, or the provider's day services. For example some people enjoyed walking, as it was both a positive stimulus and calming for them. So, instead of using cars to get about, the staff accompanied people in walks from their home, and to get to places they wanted in the town.

People were supported in their communication and relationships with other people, and their understanding of their daily routines, with the consistent use of appropriate communication methods. As an example, we saw the symbol timetables being used with people, which assured them about what was happening each day. Also, people were supported in Talk Time discussions with their keyworkers (autism practitioners) to voice their opinions and make decisions about their support and activities, and their agreed goals. These approaches helped people to; communicate more effectively with other people, to understand what was happening in their day, and to reduce any distress and associated challenging behaviours.

People's health and access to healthcare service was supported by the staff liaising closely with healthcare professionals. Staff supported people to explain symptoms to healthcare staff to assist in their treatment. To better support people in appointments the service had adopted an easy-read form to record relevant information and the outcome.

People experienced consistent, high quality support, based upon agreed approaches and risk management strategies. People and their relatives were regularly part of evaluations and reviews of their support. Since the last inspection the service's staff had written people's personal plans in a new format with easier to follow information about people. People's personal plans were both comprehensive and concise, detailing why and how to support each person individually.

As part of the excellent practice in management and leadership the service is committed to continuous improvement in supporting people with all the issues in their lives. As an example, some staff members had written a new policy and guidance on relationships and sexual wellbeing, to both support people with their relationships and ensure their protection too. The policy was also in an easy read format for staff to use with people to talk about issues such as their rights and the support they can expect.

As another example staff were involved in improving practice for better outcomes for people by dealing with issues known to have caused difficulties. A staff improvement group had developed new guidance for better communication in handovers between staff members, and agreed summaries of people's needs for relief staff working with people.

Finally, the service had improved its investigation of medication errors by staff to ensure the medication procedures are adhered to by having well structured investigations with clear outcomes which included; retraining staff, senior staff carrying out regular audits, and consideration of disciplinary action.

What the service could do better

The service was directed to follow the SSSC's Employer Referral Guidance to refer to the SSSC, as soon as possible, any staff members whose behaviour is likely to call into question their fitness to practice.

The service agreed to ask for written epilepsy emergency management plans from the responsible healthcare professionals to replace its own plans in people's person plans.

The service agreed to check that it held copies of certificates, and attached powers, for all Guardianships for people, and that the powers were specific for any actions expected of the service, especially where there was a restriction or restraint in place for a person's welfare.
